Long long ago, there was a monster named Nian. It had a huge head and sharp teeth. It lived deep in the sea. Every year on the eve of the new year, Nian came out to a small village. It ate animals and even hurt people. Everyone was very scared.

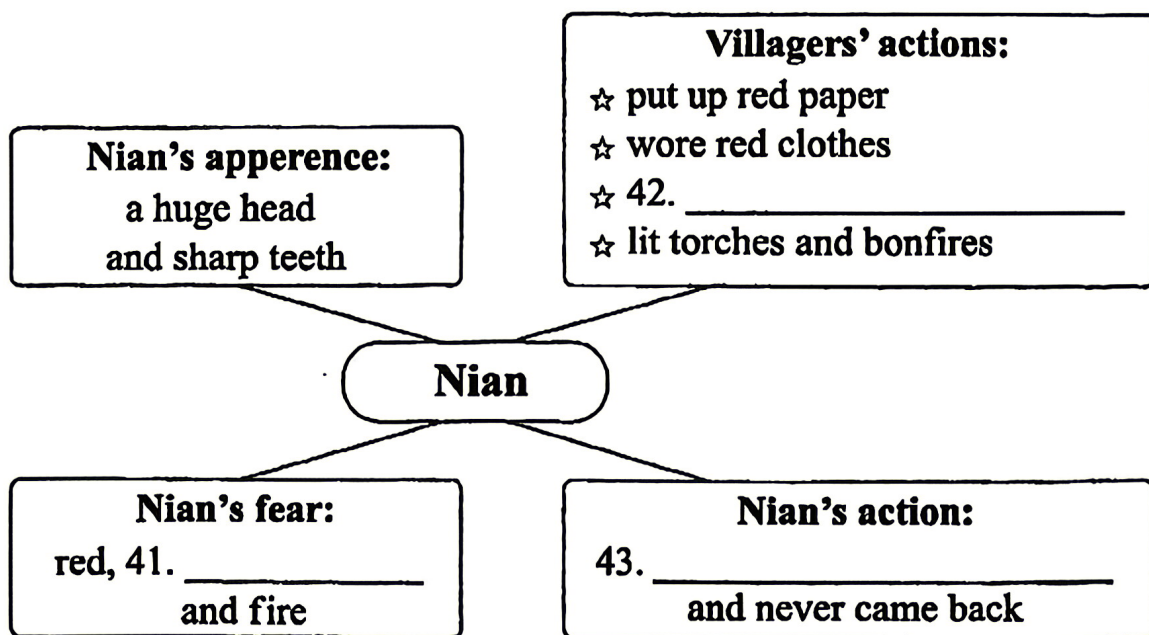

One year, an old wise man came to the village. He told the villagers, “Nian is afraid of three things: the colour red, loud noises and fire.” The villagers did not believe him at first, but they decided to try.

On the eve of the new year, they put red paper on their doors and windows. They wore red clothes. They lit firecrackers to make loud noises. They also lit torches and bonfires. That night, Nian came. When it saw the red colour everywhere and heard the bang of firecrackers, it was terrified. It ran back to the sea and never came back again.

From then on, people celebrate the Chinese New Year by putting up red couplets, setting off firecrackers and wearing red clothes. They give children red pockets for good luck. They also have a big family dinner on the eve. This is how people celebrate Chinese New Year.

Today, people no longer set off real firecrackers in many cities to protect the environment, but they use electric firecrackers or watch light shows. The red colour, however, is still everywhere during the Chinese New Year.
